

なにになるのかな？

カタツムリがいっぱいいます。

A vibrant and playful illustration featuring a large number of snails. Each snail is uniquely colored, with shells in shades of green, orange, blue, red, yellow, and purple. Their bodies are also colored to match or contrast with their shells. The snails are depicted in various orientations, some facing left, some right, and some towards the viewer. They are scattered across the white background, creating a sense of a busy, lively scene. The drawing style is simple and childlike, with bold outlines and flat colors.

A child is shown from the side, sitting at a desk and drawing on a piece of paper. The child is using a black marker to draw several shapes. One large shape is an oval with a grid pattern inside. There are several smaller, irregular shapes around it, some with grid patterns and others with different patterns. The child is wearing a grey shirt. The background is a plain white wall.
